Hello Department of Justice,

It is my understanding that the DoJ is accepting public comment on the case against Micro-Soft. I have, for years, been annoyed about the injustice that MS has had to bear:

- * They create products that have been used by the public and government to attack them - people use Word to write documents used in court to prosecute MS, people use MSs versions of email and Internet Explorer to send messages promoting the destruction of MS; Im sure you can think of more examples.

- * They are largely instrumental in the proliferation of cheaper and cheaper, yet more powerful home/business computers. And yet, they are attacked for harming the public.

As the fictional Howard Roark pointed out in his defense, in Ayn Rands The Fountain Head, long ago, someone discovered fire, and he was probably burned at the steak by his contemporaries that benefited from that very discovery. We havent come very far, sacrificing great men for the satisfaction of the mob; or have we

The corrupt Clinton administration devoted, and diverted, great resources toward the torture and destruction of the popular boogie-man, Bill Gates, while ignoring the paramount responsibility of defending the country from violent attack. I have been encouraged by the Bush administrations apparent change in course against MS. I urge you to open the jaws and let them free. The Wests greatest country, with its technology and her heroes that create it, have enough enemies (foreign and internal) without the DoJ going after it too.

Best regards,
